Germany's Struggle For Weapons Sales

Pressure Builds for Bonn to Relax Curbs on Exporting Advanced Arms

history and Bonn's perennial anxicty about its self-image.

But pressures are mounting here to allow West Germany's arms industry freer access to global markets, a move that would almost certainly intensify criticism, at home and abroad, of the centerright government.

"A sharp drop-off in arms pro-curement by the German military in tanks, aerospace and shipbuilding has led to redoubled efforts by the German arms industry to pressure Bonn into easing up on exist-ing arms-export restrictions," said Herbert Wulf, a director at Hamburg University's Institute for Research and Security Po-

The factors pressing Bonn to loosen its tight hid on weapons exports, particularly at a time of high memployment, include the need to maintain jobs and technological phygress in a wide range of fields ted to the military industry: optics, automotive engineering, radar

A recent series of corporate take- institute said West Germany garovers has woven these fields closer nered 3.9 percent of total arms extogether, giving the arms sector more financial clout and improved competitiveness.

"The biggest success in German arms exports has been in tanks and armored vehicles," said Michael Brzoska, co-director of the Arms-Trade Project at the Stockholm International Peace Research Insti-tute, a military research organization. "And that success is automotive engineering, in constructing efficient gearboxes and the like — all that adds up to very fast, very mobile tanks."

But it is precisely the tank-build-industry, pinched by export re-tions and dwindling orders 1 the North Atlantic Treaty Ornization, that is calling on Bonn for help to raise capacity use, from its current low of 60 percent, and

Moscow Criticizes U.S. Stance on Libya

MOSCOW -- The Soviet Union criticized the United States on Thursday for "attempts to subju-gate" Libya and said Moscow was sending a senior-level delegation to Tripoli on Saturday. Gennadi Gerasimov, a Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman, said at a press briefing for foreign journalists that the Reagan administra-tion had "again put into circulation the thesis of the Libyan threat."

"The Soviet Union has always stood and stands now against inter-national terrorism," he said. "We are against the method of hiding behind the words of international terrorism and attempts to subjugate an independent country. Libya is one of Moscow's princi-

French Grow Dubious on Lebanon Role

By Richard Bernstein

New York Thnes Service PARIS - Disturbed by recent PARIS — Distributed by recent clashes between its forces and Moslem milities, the French government has become increasingly unhappy over the situation facing its contingent in the United Nations peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon, according to diplomats and officials.

A government spokesman, Denis Bandouin, apparently seeking to quell speculation that France was planning to withdraw from the UN Interim Force in Lebanon, said Thursday that there was "no question of a unilateral retreat." Officials in Paris have said privately, however, that if the sina-tion does not improve. France and the eight other countries that have contributed troops in southern Lebanon may have "no choice" other than to withdraw.

The French contingent is the largest in the 5,800-member, multi-national force in southern Lebanon known as UNIFIL. Ten members of the French contingent-have beenhed by the UN Security Council m 1978.

A renewed series of attacks on the UN force began Aug. 11 with a clash between French troops and members of the Shiite militia Amal. Seventeen French soldiers have been wounded since then in what have become nearly daily clashes. Speculation about a possible French withdrawal from the UN force began mounting last week when the French government, citing the "scriously exposed" posi-tion of the French contingent, demanded that the Security provide better resources for UN troops in southern Lebanon and undertake a "deep reflection" of the role of the entire force.

The French did not clarify what a reexamination of UNIFIL's role might mean in concrete terms, but many French analysts saw the move as a diplomatic prelude to a withdrawal from the force.

That interpretation gained cur-rency Toesday when Prime Minis-ter Jacques Chirac, in a speech to constituents in his home district in central France, said it would be absurd" to keep the UN force in place unless they were better protected.

Mr. Chirac said it was "important that the UN redefine the mission of the peacekeeping force in the Middle East, failing which it would be absurd to maintain these soldiers under the conditions existing there."

Diplomats in Paris said that a withdrawal of the French contingent from the UN peacekeeping force would have strong practical and psychological effects on its ability to function in Lebanon. France: they noted, is not only the largest contributor of troops to the UN force, but the Western country with the strongest histori-cal commitment to the unity of Lebanon

Meanwhile, the French Defense Ministry on Thursday denied recent reports that French ships had been rerouted from other tasks in order to be available to transport French troops out of southern Leb-

Rent Boycotts Spread as Black South African Tactic

By Alan Cowell

New York Times Service SHARPEVILLE, South Africa -- Every night, Johannes Matemba said, he takes the foam mattress from his backyard, lays it on the floor of the house he has lived in for 33 years and goes to sleep.

That he is able to sleep in the house at all, he said, is something of a concession by the authorities, who evicted the 65-year-old retiree Ang. 13 for failure to pay the rent. They blocked off the toilet with concrete as if to display the finality of the move.

Some way off, in Tumahole township outside the town of Parys, Jal Molata makes different nocturnal arrangements. Since his home was locked up by the authorities Aug. 8 with all his goods inside, also for nonpayment of rent, he has taken to sleeping in the cab of a broken pickup truck parked

He finds it uncomfortable to sleep in the cab, wearing an overcoat and swathed in borrowed blankets. But the 58-yearold retired street cleaner said it was simpler than seeking an official permit to stay in someone else's home.

The two men have not met, but along with a growing army of others, they share the consequences of a protest that is spreading in South Africa: the refusal to pay rent for the homes in segregated townships where blacks are obliged to

By the latest count, according to the independent Commu-nity Research Group at Witswatersrand University in Johannesburg, rent boycotts — some partial, some nearly total — are under way in 42 of the nation's townships, including Soweto, the biggest, where 21 persons died this week in a clash between residents and the police.

In a report Aug. 13 the group, made up of white scademics specializing in township conditions and protests, said that as many as 300,000 black households were not paying rents, making the boycott one of the widest forms of sustained protest to emerge.

Like other boycotts, such as those in classrooms or of white-owned stores, the rent boycott is a form of protest that may damage those who take part as much as it damages their targets.

Moreover, such boycotts may be harshly enforced by youthful activists, who tell township dwellers that they face a bleak choice: Pay rent and risk having your house burned down, or withhold rent and risk eviction.

Yet activists seem to suggest that the boycotts offer to the over responsibility for some of the administration to black authorities a statement that blacks will not take part in the councils. The new councilors, branded stooges and collabounch security.

In 1960 the police shot and killed more than 60 blacks here after they had marched to protest the country's pass laws. And it was here, on Sept. 3, 1984, that a rent protest by black residents led to a confrontation with the authorities that marked the beginning of two years of unprecedented violence and protest.

But it is unclear whether Johannes Matemba really seeks the status of martyr.

In 1942, be said, he started work at a golf club frequented by whites, and by the time he retired in 1981, he had risen to

His pension from the job, he said, totals the equivalent of about $110 a month. The rent, when he paid it, was roughly $25, and electricity cost a further $35. Before the eviction, the house was home to him and his nine children, some working some not.

"秦衛衛州衛州衛衛衛門司衛門

But then in September 1984 the white authorities handed vide facilities and establish legitimacy.

But the conundrum they inherited from the white admire istrators was that the only way they could increase their revenues was to increase the rents, destroying the same redibility they were seeking to establish. When a rent increase was announced in Sharpeville, people protested. In the confrontations here and in nearby townships such as Evaton and Sebokeng, 29 persons were reported to have been killed in two days of violence. From nen on, no one paid rent.

"We did not want to be thrown out," said one of Mr. Matemba's sons, Maurice, 29, "but the comrades say they'll burn your house down with everything in it if you pay rent." Comrade is the title used by the young black militants who have led the nation's protest and violence.

Activists, moreover, like to let it be known that they have their informers at the rent office and may identify those who

So, the father said, no rent was paid. Then, on Aug. 13, "they just came in, about two vans of them, and took the things out," be said.

The army, the son said, "patrolled the streets" while the eviction was taking place and the toilet was being comented. The local black council police force, he said, threw his belongings into the yard.

Some people argue that the rent protests bear the seeds of a renewal of widespread violence, despite the newest emer-gency decree, which was imposed June 12. A prominent activist said, "If they start evicting in Sebokeng - they will not dare, because we will resist, we are from work, and we will boycott the buses, too." The buses, privately owned, are often targets of black protest because they are seen as the umbilical cord of segregation, providing transportation for those blacks who work in white-run cities.

The activist touched on another division of life in segregated black townships, where blacks are categorized by their readiness to accept official favor.

Driving through Sebokeng he pointed out an area, generally of more expensive homes, and said, "This is where the collaborators live." He was referring to those who work for white-run institutions such as the police, the medical services and the schools, and thus enjoy official favor.

Progress On Chemical Arms Cited In Geneva

By Thomas W. Netter New York Times Service GENEVA — The 40-nation Geneva Conference on Disarmament concluded its 1986 session Thursday after making what U.S. and NATO officials termed "noteworthy" progress on its key issue, a ban on the production, storage and use of chemical weapons. In a sharp turnaround from the gloomy assessments that marked the end of last year's session of the multilateral conference, the officials said an American-sponsored draft treaty text had received "significant elaboration and restructuring" during the six-month session.

Nevertheless, Donald Lowitz, the chief U.S. delegate, cantioned that much remained to be done to militant — but if they do, then we will call for a stayaway reach a treaty on chemical weapons. The question has been before the conference since 1968, and has been under intense negotiation since the U.S. draft proposal was submitted by Vice President George Bush two years ago.

> "Nothing has been finalized in the sense that it is ready to roll over into a final treaty," Mr. Lowitz

WASHINGTON — The National Rifle Association, having won a major victory in weakening federal gan-control laws, is taking aim at a congressional ban on the sale of new machine gurs.

A provision to ban the private purchase or sale of newly manufactured machine guns, those not already registered with the federal government, was added to the Mo-Clure-Volkmer gun decontrol law in the final minute of House debate

The ban has the effect of limiting the number of machine guns in legal circulation to about 127,000. The three-million-member asso-ciation says it has lined up House

Another Bash at Gadhafi?

For some months after the April 15 attack on Libya, U.S. officials cautiously savored the possibility that a sobered Moammar Gadhafi had retreated to the desert to contemplate the features of a world in which he could no longer take for granted widespread indulgence of his acts of terrorism. In Washington, however, a new analysis has become known, courtesy first of the Wall Street Journal. Officials say they have detected renewed signs of interest in terrorism by the Libyan leader. There is also some suggestion that the United States is trying to psych out the Libyan strongman by fomenting anxiety about what it is planning. Whatever its purpose, the policy is clearly to publicize American intentions to retaliate against, and perhaps even pre-empt, further Gadhafi-inspired terrorist acts. Fresh efforts have been undertaken to get the allies to strengthen sanctions against a Gadhafi who is pictured as "mentally unstable" but still capable, perhaps because of the alleged instability, of fresh offenses.

One reaction to the new analysis will surely be a judgment that it proves that the April 15 raid was a mistake, since the attack bought quiet for a period of time only long enough for Colonel Gadhafi to regroup, and since his revival is bound to appear as a major coup. A second reaction may be that the United States has no choice but to give it to the Libyans really good the next time: to mount an attack that would put his later revival or even his survival out of question.

Neither of these conclusions makes much sense to us. Anyone who thought at the time that the April raid had ended Libyan terror was foolish. It was enough that the United States had good and necessary grounds to hold up its end in the struggle against international anarchy. Terrorism is no ephemeral thing. Particular individuals have a responsibility for driving the phenomenon forward, but deeper conditions sustain it. It follows that terrorism must be fought not by a single concentrated blow but by persistent intelligent defense conducted on many fronts on a continuing basis.

The United States has the raw power to strike out against Colonel Gadhafi in an overwhelming way at any time. Many Americans and many people elsewhere, however, would object to the scale — the disproportionate quality - of such a response. It would amount to an act of unilateralism, since even close friends in Europe would likely stint on their support.

Since April the allies have come far in firming up their stand against Colonel Gadhafi. This is a qualitative change of increasing importance. We do not know what ence may have discovered about Colonel Gadhafi's post-April offenses or his new plans. These would surely have to rise to an unprecedentedly monstrous level to justify breaking up the common alliance policy that the United States has been trying carefully to build since April.

The Child's Interest First

Elizabeth Stern, a 40-year-old pediatrician, cannot bear a child. Mary Beth White-Baby M., which home is hers. head, a 30-year-old housewife, can. With the Infertility Center of New York acting as agent, the Sterns leased Mrs. Whitehead's reproductive potential for $10,000; she was to be artificially inseminated with Mr. Stern's sperm, bear the baby and then give it to the Sterns. Did Mrs. Whitehead contract to sell her baby, a transaction that would be illegal, or her services? Services, say supporters of the surrogate mother industry. That view was endorsed by Mrs. Whitehead when she agreed to bear Mr. Stem's child. "I wanted to do something good for someone," she said.

But on seeing the little girl that she named Sara, she said, "my emotions just overpowered me." To take $10,000 for her looked a lot like selling a baby. She turned the baby over to the Sterns but did not accept the money. A few days later she asked if she could keep the child, whom they had named Melissa, for a week. They agreed. When the baby was not returned, six policemen arrived at the Whiteheads' front door in New Jessey. Mrs. Whitehead handed the baby out a back window to her husband and they fled to Florida. Now, having been tracked down, Mrs. Whitehead faces criminal charges and the Sterns have the baby. Mr. Stern says, about life with the girl they call Melissa, "I love be complicated, but the underlying principle." it." Mrs. Whitehead says, about the girl she ple is clear: the best interests of the child.

Assuming that blood tests prove Mr. Stern's fatherhood, the judge can treat the case as a contract dispute, making New Jersey the first U.S. state to rule on the legality of surrogate mother contracts. Or the case might be treated as a custody battle, in which event the court will do what it does in any other custody dispute: decide what is in the best interest of the child.

With the marked increase in infertility among younger couples, the surrogate mother business appears to have a bright future. According to a 1983 government study, more than three million American married women want to have babies but cannot conceive. Many are eager to have a child with their husband's genes; a growing number of women are happy to oblige.
The public obligation is obvious. If states wish to tolerate surrogate parenthood, they need to establish guidelines, just as they do for adoption and other related issues. In many states, a man who donates to a sperm bank may be paid but he forfeits his right to any resulting child. Analogous guidelines would allow for the possibility, as in adoption cases, that a surrogate mother could change her mind within a specified time, or that someone in Mr. Stern's position could change his. The potential permutations may

Still Too Much Poverty

The good news is that the poverty rate declined again in the United States last for black children was 43.1 percent and for year. The bad news is that the decline was so much smaller than the year before and that this late in the recovery the poverty rate remains so high. The administration says the solution to the poverty problem lies in the private economy, not public programs. That was the lesson it drew a year ago when the poverty figures came out for 1984: Growth was up, and poverty went down. But in 1985 the economy weakened, and this year it has remained weak. The private economy may have done most of what it can to alleviate poverty in this business cycle. The 14 percent poverty rate announced this week - one seventh of the population — is not a good place from which to move into a period of sustained low growth or the next recession. The pattern continues to be different for different groups and regions. In the Northeast, poverty went down last year; in the rest of the country it stayed about the same. Among blacks the rate declined; median black family income went up 5 percent last year after inflation, the most of any measured group, the Census Bureau said. The improvement is heartening, but what it left is not. The black poverty rate remained 31.3 percent; the estimated Hispanic poverty rate rose slightly to 29 percent. Children, black and Hispanic particularly, continued to be the worst-off group in the society, in part because so many live in Hispanic children 39.6 percent.

The poverty issue has mostly been discussed in the context of this administration's tax and budget cuts. But poverty had begun to rise before Ronald Reagan came to office; the low point was 11.1 percent, achieved in 1973. The income gap between rich and poor families had also begun to grow. No one knows all the reasons why.

The administration's early policies exacerbated this problem, but current policies may be helping. In the early Reagan years the tax burden in the upper-income regions was reduced, while for the poor it was allowed to rise. The new tax bill would correct for this as to the poor; the tax threshold would be put back above the poverty line. The decline in inflation also has helped. Benefits under Aid to Families with Dependent Children have lost about a third of their purchasing power to inflation in 15 years, but last year they recovered slightly. Plainly, though, there is more that an aggressive government could do.

AFDC benefits, even supplemented by Medicaid, food stamps and other forms of noncash aid, remain too low. So does the minimum wage, last increased in 1981. The unemployment rate — 7 percent — is un-acceptably high. The news that poverty went down last year is welcome, but the figures are no cause for celebration.

Why Not Recognize Palestinian Rights in Principle?

By Jerome Segal

OLLEGE PARK, Maryland — Common wisdom has it that intransigence on the part of the Palestine Liberation Organization is a prime obstacle in Middle East peacetion is a prime obstacle in Middle East peace-seeking. King Hassan's insistence that only the PLO can speak for Palestinians supposed-ly caused the impasse in Israeli Prime Minis-ter Shimon Peres's historic visit to Morocco last month. After all, wasn't it PLO intransigence that foiled the attempt at peace-seeking by King Hussein of Jordan earlier this year?

A careful review of the facts does not support this interpretation. It reveals significant flexibility on the part of the PLO, and U.S.

failure to take advantage of that.

When King Hussein broke off his effort to bring about negotiations in Pebruary, he made clear that he was exasperated by his experience with the PLO. Specifically, he felt that the organization had reneged on a com-mitment to accept United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338 as the basis for an international peace conference. (The resolutions recognize Israel's right to exist in peace, and call for negotiations in which peace would be achieved through return of

For months King Hussein had been telling Washington that he had the PLO's agreement to accept Resolutions 242 and 338 if the United States agreed to participate in an international conference to which the PLO would be invited. After great effort, he obtained U.S. acceptance of PLO participation provided that the PLO clearly and publicly accepted 242 and 338, renounced terrorism and was willing to negotiate with Israel.

When King Kussein reported this progress to the PLO, he found that it was willing to accept 242 and 338 only if the United States accepted the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination. The PLO gave King Hussein, for conveyance to Washington, various formulas whereby it would accept 242 and 338. Shortly thereafter he threw in the towel.

A recent exchange of letters between the State Department and Representative Lee H. Hamilton, the Indiana Democrat who chairs the Middle East subcommittee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, sheds interesting light on what happened. It suggests that inisence on the part of the United States asked whether the State Department had knowledge of the PLO proposals before the speech. Yes, it had seen them on Feb. 6. Mr. Hamilton asked if State had considered the proposals an improvement on previous PLO positions. It responded, "Explicit references to 242 and 338 and to Israel are new."

This was progress; previous PLO statements had avoided direct mention of Israel and of the key resolutions. Why, then, did the effort collapse two weeks later? From Washington's point of view, the problem was PLO insistence that it support

Palestinians' right of self-determination. Mr. Hamilton asked, "Is the reference to Palestinian right of self-determination consistent with U.S. policy?" State replied: "The term 'self-determination' has in the Middle East context come to connote the establishment of a Palestinian state ... The United States does not support the establishment of an independent Palestinian state. Therefore such a reference is not consistent with U.S. policy." In other words, the United States would not agree to the PLO's precondition. Presum-

thus he abandoned the effort. But what of America's position? It refuses to recognize a Palestinian right of self-determination because it opposes the creation of a Palestinian state. Does this make sense?

ably this was conveyed to King Hussein and

Is America against a Palestinian state in principle? In the original United Nations par-tition resolution, which legitimized the cre-ation of Israel, it was proposed that there be helped to derail the peace process.

King Hussein received the PLO proposals on Feb. 5. He washed his hands of the PLO in a speech on Peb. 19. Congressman Hamilton tition resolution, which legitimized the creation of Israel, it was proposed that there be both a Jewish state and a Palestinian state.

The United States supported that resolution.

Why does it now not support the establishment of a Palestinian state? Apparently because of fears that the state would be hostile to Israel and would be a further source of conflict in the Middle East. Perhaps this judgment is correct; perhaps it is incorrect. But what are we to say of the logic of the position?

On principle it would seem hard to deny that the Palestinians have a right to self-determination. After all, if the Israelis have such a right, how can the Palestinians have less? The problem is that the right to self-determination does not include the right to establish a state that would then threaten its neighbors. The U.S. concern, and that of many Israelis, is how the Palestinians would exercise their right to self-determination.

Logically speaking, however, concerns about how a right is exercised are not a basis for denying that the right exists. Rights are not absolute. (Free speech does not mean you can yell "Fire!" in a theater.) The United States can with consistency grant that the Palestinians have a right to self-determination, even grant that in principle they have the right to an independent state, and still oppose the establishment of such a state until it can be shown that the exercise of that right would not violate or threaten the rights of others.

Approaching abstract issues of rights in this way would help to bring about and focus peace negotiations on the right point: How to satisfy both the Palestinian right to self-determination and the Israeli right to live in peace.

Comforted by the Moroccan-Israeli summit and Israel's endorsement of the Taba arbitration agree-ment, President Hosni Mubarak is ready to hold a long-delayed meeting with Mr. Peres. During several lean years, relations were strained by Israel's military intervention in Lebanon, irritated by the protracted negotiations on Taba and chilled by Egypt's mainly successful efforts to reassert its influence in the Arab world. There exists now a reasonable prospect that renewed top-level dialogue will promote better under-

Too much time has been wasted by futile exercises in diplomatic minuets, performed to a false tune by ited partners on the wrong floor. The forthcoming summit of-fers a unique opportunity to get the stalled peace train moving by devis-ing a new itinerary and timetable, adjusted to the existing realities.

The Palestinian section of the Camp David accord outlined the route forward. Unfortunately not even the first transitional stage of autonomy for the West Bank and Gaza has been reached, mainly due to differences between Jordan and the Palestinians and their common refusal to negotiate with Israel.

In consequence, Israel steadily strengthened its hold over the territories, while the Palestinians progressively forfeited their best interests. An agreement to resume the aborted autonomy talks, with wider regional problems and the changes in format, venue and agenda, would probably provide the best area, they are likely to discover that chance for new momentum. To avoid further procrastination by continued semantic quibbling over magic formulas for opening the door to the negotiation chamber, the invitation to the conference should be as concise and unspecific as possible. that only by international action can peace in the Middle East be won, so a recent Soviet initiative is most important. Moscow proposes that the five permanent members of the UN Security Council - the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China -together tackle the growing dangers of the Middle East. They could negotiate together, hear both sides and then lay down the basis for a lasting peace to be endorsed by the General Assembly. Surely this is the way to go: an international settlement backed by both superpowers, with the authority of the United Nations, in the interests of all those involved.

Indeed there is no other way. Liknd will soon take over from Labor in Israel resolved to perpetuate the deadlock by refusing to release any Palestine territory. A Debt Solution: Link Relief to Long-Term Trade Concessions

By Rudiger Dornbusch

WASHINGTON — The Latin debt problem is stuck after four years of wishful mismanage The writer is a professor of economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was part of a working group that helped Senator Bill Bradley develop his proposals on trade and debt.

ment. The Baker plan has backfired in that it has become a cover for commercial banks to pull out of debt rescheduling by leaving the bag to multilateral agencies, with zero net benefit to debtors and trade interests. Senator but firadley's proposal for limited, trade-linked debt relief recognizes that more than banking interests are at stake. He advances two realistic objectives: to bargain trade concessions in exchange for limited and highly selective debt relief, and to turn around the officially assisted debt collection process that has become a major foreign policy liability.

Two features of the debt collection process are important to understand. First, debts are being serviced to the detriment of U.S. trade interests. Second, debt is being serviced by a deep cut in Latin America's investment programs. For both reasons, the pre-sent debt strategy works to the detri-ment of broad U.S. interests.

Debtors can pay interest only if they cam the dollars with which to pay, so they have to sell more to the United States and buy less from it.

And indeed they have. Since 1982. U.S. trade with Latin America has experienced a swing of fully $15 bil-lion, not even counting services. Lat-in America is running a huge trade surplus not due to export hist but due that enforce premature debt service. The business end of the deal is this: For every dollar of interest you collect, you lose a dollar of trade. Latin countries have put their labor on sale to outcompete U.S. firms in U.S. markets and in theirs. Already to the political and economic threats strapped by an overvalued dollar, U.S. firms are now hit by the loss of markets and by Third World competition of the United States' own making. Debt relief would mean increased Latin American spending power, more U.S. exports and less of an import invasion from the south.

Untimely debt service also involves trouble in Latin America. To free goods for exports or to cut down imports, something must give. Real wages have been cut dramatically —

40 percent in Mexico, for example—and consumption per capita is off sharply. But the brunt of the beltnomics, has argued that things are tightening has fallen on investment.
The numbers are scary: From 1963 to 1985, investment as a ratio of GNP fell by five percentage points below the average of the previous seven years. That decline corresponds almost exactly to the turnaround in the trade balance. In other words, Latin America pays interest by sharply reducing levels of investment. In some countries, net investment has fallen to zero or has even turned negative.

Argentina being a case in point.

That is frightening because there is no expansion in capacity and jobs despite a strongly growing labor force. The supply side is wearing out, but it is the supply side that must ultimately pay the bills. Debt relief would mean that Latin America would have the resources to invest. Instead of selling shoes in the United States, Latin Americans could keep them and also buy U.S. machines.

nomics, has argued that things are represent with sufficient certs fully to make hanging in the best strategy. Debt relief would erect insurmountable obstacles against a return to voluntary lending. Countries that back out of debt services now, he says, will be on the sidelines of the game of international finance for the season and beyond. But his argument carries little persuasion. Debtors in crisis normally get away with default.

That happened in the 1930s when all of Latin America wrote down its debts, serviced them in local currency or simply failed to pay. The Foreign Bond Holders Protective Council re-ported in 1949 that of the whole of Latin America's debt, half was in complete default, 45 percent was serviced with write-downs of principal and interest, and less than 3 percent was serviced on the original contracts of the principal outstanding. And Latin America prospered.

By suspending debt service, Latin America gained room to grow at much higher rates than the depression-stricken industrial countries. The trade and the month of the mont to provide resources for both growth and interest payments. However, once countries walked away from their debts, there was plenty left to support an impressive period of growth and industrialization. Today Latin America has two op-

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Nine Steps for Debtors

The "Nine Proposals for Coping With Third World Debt" advocated by Melvin M. Fagen on this page on Ang. 18 would only temporarily relieve the current symptoms of the debt crisis. As with other proposals for increased financial assistance to debtor nations, they ignore the cor-rective actions that Third World countries need to take themselves. Mr. Fagen's points essentially propose a ceiling on debt service payments, easier repayment terms, increases in private, government and World Bank lending and less stringent requirements by the IMF to avoid conditions that create social upheaval. He also proposes joint creditor-debtor country action to prevent "unauthorized export of capital from over-indebted countries." He cites this unauthorized outflow at $100 billion per annum - about the same amount as the estimated interest that Third World countries must pay each year on outstandiong loans. Such proposals are analgous to prescribing heroine for the dope ad-attracting domestic and foreign capi-tal alike into productive investments. For most countries, this means eliminating monopoly privileges, li-censing and regulatory barriers; tariff walls and confiscatory tax regimes that limit businesses from reaching full potential and dissuade national and foreign investors from creating new wealth. Nine suggestions:

1. Eliminate restrictions on foreign investment as a share of ownership.

2. Allow annual repatriation of dividends up to 20 percent of foreign equity invested in the country.

3. Allow full foreign exchange retention for all firms that generate additional exports. Allow these ex-porters to sell foreign exchange to other businesses at any price. 4. Allow nationals to open interest-bearing accounts in hard currencies, and allow deposits to be made during an initial one-year period on a "noquestions-asked basis." 5. Limit tariffs on imported raw materials, intermediate goods and capital equipment to 20 percent.

6. Set the corporate tax rate at 30 percent, but disallow accelerated investment credits and allowances. 7. Eliminate double taxation of dividends by taxing corporate profits World Bank currently researching the once at the company level and ex- incentive effects of tax policy.

8. Reduce personal tax rates to a maximum 30 percent and broaden the tax base by reducing deductions. 9. Convert all business licencing regulation to simple registration of new businesses, thus ending de facto monopoly privileges for government and private firms alike.

The substitution of equity investment for foreign loans will be the hallmark of countries that have re-solved their debt problems. There until borrowers and creditors alike recognize that the solution lies with basic reform of economic policies that have discouraged investment and retarded growth. No amount of new loans and debt rescheduling can replace such reform. Neither can standard IMF "austerity" programs which, while useful for improving fis-cal and monetary stability, do not by and large dismantle barriers to growth or provide the necessary incentives to attract investment and get Third World economies going.

Yet, in an earlier time, IPS fellows possessed the aura of glamor that came from being Washington's most intense intellectual opponents of the Lyndon B. Johnson and Richard M. Nixon istrations. Mr. Raskin's and Mr. Barnet's names appeared on the "enemies list" created in the Nixon administration.

N those glory days, when the New Frontier was evolving into the Great Society, a few notions that had been incubated at IPS, such as the Model Cities program and the Teachers Corps, became policy. And in the halcyon days before the Vietnam War, IPS became a regular part of the policy-making culture, where officials and scholars mingled Above all, IPS pioneered the modern politics of ideas in the capital. And even as conserva-tives were clubbing IPS, they tried to imitate its form. The Heritage Foundation, for example, was modeled directly on IPS.

In the age of the best and brightest, it was an impeccable resume. The calm and rational Mr. Barnet seemed built to specification for the State Department world, yet he was already somewhat disillusioned.

"I was quite struck by the relationship between academics and the government," he says. "They were essentially servicing the bureaucraincre are less anspectous visus from the less anspectous visus from graduate of the University of Chicago and its cies, not challenging the assumptions. It was a

Washington was then in the Stone Age of think tanks. Following the dominant model of the Brookings Institution, the few that existed aspired to neutrality and "value-free" research. The notion of a politically engaged institute struck a lot of the people as a bizarre innova-

Foundation support this year includes grants from MacArthur ($200,000) and Ford ($50,000). The Rubin Foundation, whose endowment comes from the Faberge perfume fortune, has given millions over the years.

The ideological hegemony that conservatives currently exercise — especially over the Washington political community, according to Mr. Barnet - may be because "people on the right had a much more perceptive view of the importance of ideas than the liberals."

But the conservatives have also had Mr. Reagan, whose popularity has muffled much de-bate. When the battle for the post-Reagan succession begins in earnest, when preconceived notions are overrun by events, what Mr. Barnet calls the "crisis of all ideologies" may finally

What it feels like to be a leftist in a conservative age can be broken down into distinct stages, something akin to grief: First comes shock—disbelief that a conservative is actually president and that he actually has a program. Then come fear and trembling —fright that the program is a new Inquisition. Rage and protest follow, succeeded by a recognition of the need for new thinking. This works-in-progress stage is the one that most IPS scholars currently find themselves in. Accordingly, IPS fellows will publish about 15 books this year, six issued by

In recent years, the views of some IPS fellows have prompted the charge that they have be-come apologists for Third World revolutionary

"They are absolutely pro-Sandinist," says Robert Leiken, a fellow at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, who has been associated with IPS in the past. "I have not heard a critical word." "It's critical to be critical," says Mr. Barnet.

"There's always a danger of appearing to be an apologist of something you're trying to explain in a hostile political environment. There's a perception that we're overly concerned with the Third World. I think it's a fair criticism." He adds. "Our biggest weakness is in domestic policy.

But the criticism about IPS that comes from places other than the right is not really about being "overly concerned" with the Third. World. Rather, IPS is charged with a romanticism that clouds perception. The focus of much of this criticism falls on Saul Landau, who befriended Fidel Castro in 1960 and made a film about him. But much of the rosy glow has faded. "For me," Mr. Landau reflects, "Cuba is not a terri-bly attractive model. The stuff that seemed exciting to me 25 years ago — revolution doesn't seem exciting now. I want to get out of Nicaragua and into America." "The real question," says Mr. Barnet, "is to redefine the conditions the nation is in, which are totally different from the period after World War II."

Since 1983, IPS has sponsored an annual meeting of U.S. experts and Soviet officials, a meeting that, incidentally, provides a perennial occasion for denunciations.

Howard M. Wachtel, an economist at American University in Washington and a fellow at Transnational Institute - an IPS affiliate based in Amsterdam - explains in a new book how a "supranational" monetary system has created novel perils of instability.

Yet another project, focusing on the future of numan rights and planned in anticipation of the bicentennial of the Constitution in 1987, is being conducted by Mr. McGovern.

The current scene has been intricately analyzed by another fellow, William B. Cannon, former dean of the Lyndon R. Johnson School of Public Administration at the University of Texas, whose forthcoming book argues that the 1980s have been a decade of yawning inequal-

IS political prescription is to transform the Democratic Party into a tightly disciplined party of the "lower class."

At the institute, Mr. Cannon's analysis provoked much debate. There was general agreement with his view of what Mr. Reagan had wrought, but general disagreement with his political proposition.

But the sum of the parts does not equal the whole. "We are defined by the tension with orthodoxy," says Mr. Barnet, "not just by the particular issues or proposals we make."

Yet this is not the only tension with which those at IPS must cope. There is much talk about the wretched of the world, but little about the class to which the IPS fellows happen to belong: the new class whose skill is knowledge and information.

The IPS thinkers have not devised a new New Deal. But they believe that a transformation at least on that scale is needed. They have an intimation that this is an age in which the old categories no longer apply and the new ones have not yet been clearly defined.

"The steam has gone out of all the major ideologies, whether it's Marxism, or pure capitalism, or even the standard mix that goes by the name of social democracy," says Mr. Bar-net. "They are all basically 19th-century ideologies; they are all in crisis.

"This is a time waiting for new ideas to provide some kind of structure," he said. "It is one of the reasons there is an impatience with the institute, People want answers."

"The old ideologies must be transcended; they impair our understanding," says Mr. Ras-kin. "We have to continue searching."

U.S. Aide Asks Food Truce

Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — A U.S. official has appealed to the Sudanese government and the rebel Sudan People's Liberation Army to agree to a "food truce" that would permit deliveries to hundreds of thousands of people facing starvation.

"As the condition of large numbers of innocent people continues to deteriorate rapidly, I call upon the government and the SPLA to allow desperately needed food to reach those in need," M. Peter McPherson, administrator of the Agency for International Development, said

Nonmilitary American aid to Sudan during fiscal 1985 was slightly more than $400 million, with $261 million of that in regular and emergency food aid.

Because of political and administrative problems caused by a military coup last year, U.S. aid this year has fallen to about $200 million. But that has included food assistance of $161 million in the form of wheat, wheat flour and sorghum.

The United States has offered to provide an additional 3,000 metric tons of grain, but the offer has not been accepted because of delivery problems resulting from the civil war. The U.S. plan is for Kenya, which has a surplus of corn, to deliver the grain from its stocks, with the United States reimbursing Kenya later with American grain.

Dutch Decry Sentence In Foreign Drug Case

DUSSELDURF - Ham Dost, a Dutch citizen, was sentenced to 10 years in prison here last week for selling hashish and marijuana in the Netherlands to West German tourists. The sentence has caused a public outcry in Holland. Dutch politicians and journalists access the Düs-seldorf court of trying to punish the Netherlands for its permis-sive policy toward "soft drugs." Small-scale selling of such drug is tolerated by Dutch authorities, who say they prefer to concentrate on fighting heroin and other hard drugs. Frederik Korthals Altes, the Dutch justice minister, is to travel to Boan soon to discuss the Dost

Mr. Dost, 38, ran a drugstore in the city of Arnhem, 18 miles (30 kilometers) from the West German border, in which he openly sold hashish from 1978 until November 1984. That month, while on vacation in Tenerife, he was arrested by Span-ish police on West German charges of selling drugs and smuggling them into West Germany. The smuggling charge was dropped after Spain extra-dited him to West Germany. Mr. Dost's attorneys said West German authorities had used a false charge of smuggling to obtain his extradition, and that they had no right to prose-cute him for crimes committed outside West Germany. But the prosecutor in Düsseldorf said West Germany had the right to act against people who repre-sented a danger to its society.

Police Training Cited In 2 Paris Killings

PARIS - Discrepancies between the instructions given Paris police officers and their training could help explain why two unarmed men were shot and killed by policemen in sep-arate incidents last month, the Paris daily Le Monde said last week. The price handbook tells officers to use their arms only "in legitimate self-defense," and "not just out of fear of possible violence." It also advises the use of arms "in pro-portion to the attack." But at the force's eight shooting ranges, policemen are taught to shoot to kill, rather than wound, the paper said.

A Paris policeman, aiming at a still target representing a person, receives the maximum score of five points when he mis the head or chest; four for the shoulders, and three or less for the arms and lower torso. He cannot practice shooting at the legs, since the target stops just below the waist. In some other European countries, policemen are rewarded highest points according to the precision with which they hit the lower part of a life-sized target.

Chernobyl Increases Nuclear Sightseeing

STOCKHOLM -- Thousands of tourists have visited Swedish nuclear plants since the Chernobyl disaster in April, driven by both fear and curios-ity. The Ringhals power station in western Sweden said that 10,000 visitors had come in the three months after the Soviet disaster, twice as many as in the comparable period in 1985. Visitors are asking many more questions than before, said a spokesman at the Forsmark plant on the east coast.

Meanwhile, in England, the campaign to attract visitors to the Sellafield nuclear power station has proven such a success that new jobs have been created to handle the influx. The num-ber of visitors is expected to exceed 100,000 this year, up from 30,000 last year. The sta-

ST. POLTEN, Austria Lower Austria was the only of Austria's nine regions that did not have its own capital, until it chose one in a referendum this spring. Last month, St. Polten officially became the regional capital of Lower Austria, which had been governed by Vienna. Officials in Vienna estimate that it may take 15 years before all regional offices and services can be moved to St. Polten. History and geography textbooks have to be rewritten, and road signs must be changed to reflect the town's new status. The city's 15,000 people are also calling for St. Polten ficense plates, a university and an airport. Avia-tion officials are doubtful about the latter ambition because St. Pölten is only 38 miles (60 kilo-meters) from Vienna.

LONDON - Londoners are truly honest, says the British' weekly The Observer. A reporter, posing as a French tourist, spent a day at the city's tourist siles trying hard to get "ripped off," as instructed by his superiors. He flashed stacks of £10 bills at taxi drivers and store owners and invariably got back the right change. "Our indus-tries may be declining, our ex-port deliveries late and our sewers cracking up but, by God, we're honest," he wrote.

LIVERPOOL - Politics in this dark and lively city has become as bare-knucked as life was on its docks before the collapsing economy made if the hard-times capital of the Labor Party.

The strategies of Trotsky are wielded now by garrulous City Hall incumbents with the sort of thrust that used to drive the dockers' baling hooks, and paradoxically their effort is pointed at the heart of the Labor Party's hierarchy in London. Tony Mulhearn, who was recenty expelled from the local Labor

Mr. Kinnock's targets here are Mr. Mulhearn and eight other leaders of an aggressive, locally successful faction of the party called the Militant Tendency, which Labor critics denounce as a dictatorial fifth column bent on exploiting the party for dogmatic purposes.

The Militants, driven by the tonets of Marxism and the fervor that comes of this region's long-term memployment, insist that they em-body the party's original Socialist concerns, which they say have long since been muddled by national Labor leaders like Mr. Kinnock in searching for the safer middle ground of voter appeal.

About 60,000 manufacturing jobs have been eliminated in Liver-pool over the last seven years, with unemployment at 20 percent on average. Among the young in neighborhoods like Dovecot and Croxteth, it is estimated to be near 90 percent.

Mr. Kinnock's crusade against the Militants is appreciated by Sir Trevor Jones, the Liberal Party leader on the City Council, who contends that the city is broke and badly run and that his party expects to regain control in the next elections. In his view, the Kinnock offensive, as much as it might reas-sure middle-class voters closer to London, could prove self-defeating because it overlooks the fact that whether he likes it or not the Militants are the Labor Party

DEVELOPMENT OPPORTUNITY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

INVITATION FOR PROPOSALS

The British Columbia Ministry of Lands, Parks and Housing is disposing of its Tranquille property, for redevelopment by the private sector.

Tranquille is located just west of Kamloops in the south-central interior of British Columbia, on beautiful Kamloops Lake. This secluded location offers outstanding scenic and outdoor recreation opportunities. The climate is dry and sunny, with long summers and short, mild winters. The property is suited to many uses ranging from a destination resort to a hightech research and light industry community.

TRANQUILLE REDEVELOPMENT

The property includes:

- the Tranquille Community area: approx. 25 ha fully developed with a variety of buildings and services, used until recently as an institutional health care complex; and

- the Tranquille Farm area: 195 ha of agricultural land and farm buildings, including some of the most productive land in the Thompson-Nicola

An information package will be made available to interested parties. For further information contact:

Alabama black heritage

At sites ranging from the Carver Museum at Tuske-gee Institute, where George Washington Carver's scientific contributions are memorialized, to the Denter Avenue King Memorial Baptist Church in Montgomery, where the ther King Jr. began his leadership of the civil rights movement, the state of Alabama is recalling its black heritage. More than 80 sites — includ-ing the Alabama Sports Hall of Fame in Biringham, where such Alabama-born or bred athletes as Joe Louis, Jesse Owens (left), Hank Aar-on and Willie Mays are enshrined, sites where black Union soldiers fought during the Civil War, and the courthouse in Decatur where the Scottsboro Boys stood trial in 1933 — are listed in a new brochure, "Alabama's Black Heritage: A Tour of Historic Sites," Alabama Bureau of Travel and Tourism 532 South Perry Street, Montgomery, Alabama 36104.

Romancing the Mighty River Rhine

by James M. Markham

HE big river would seem to hold no mystery. One block from our house in Bonn, the Rhine slips along -fast, fat and confident in the winter and spring, trimmer in summer — right to left, toward Co-logne, the Netherlands and the North nade by the Rhine, ride my bike, walk the dog, who is bemused by the ducks clucking in the eddies, salute promenading friends and acquaintances who, too, have struck a certain easy rapport with this big brown ribbon of water that is wound around the romantic innards of the German soul

The Rhine - 1,320 kilometers long (820 miles) — stretches from the Swiss Alps, disappearing and pausing in Lake Constance, emerging and hanging a right at Basel, then working its northerly way up the frontier between France and West Germany, cutting a sinuous crease through the chunk of West Germany named, naturally enough, the Rhine-land. It spreads flat and wide into the Netherlands, where it bewilderingly assumes a number of aliases before effacing itself in the ocean. Surely no stretch of water has evoked such an outpouring of literary treacle. The pen hesitates before adding to the output.

"The Rhine is swift as the Rhone." exclaimed Victor Hugo, "wide as the Loire, deeply embanked like the Meuse, winding as the Seine, limpid and green as the Somme, historic as the Tiber, royal as the Danube, mysterious as the Nile, spangled with gold like a river of America, covered with fables and phantoms like a river of Asia." In the German imagination, the river throbs with powerful patriotic resonances. "The Rhine — Germany's river but not Germany's frontier!" intoned Ernst Moritz Arndt, a passionate 19thcentury advocate of German unification under Prassia. "Without the Rhine, Germany's freedom cannot long endure." Or try Max Schneckenburger, a contemporary of Arndt's and an anthor of nationalistic verse: "Dear Fatherland, thou may'st be calm; true and steadfast is the watch on the Rhine."

Even Friedrich Engels, one of the fathers of Communism, was not immune from Rhine patriotism. In 1840, Engels chastized "traveling John Bulls who languish in their cabins from Rotterdam to Cologne and only then go up on deck, because their 'Panorama of the Rhine from Cologne to Mainz' begins there. The young of Germany should choose as their place of pilgrimage some less fre-quented place like Xanten, home of the hero Siegfried." The confluence of the Mosel and Rhine at Koblenz is grandiosely called "das Deutsche Eck," the German corner, and is bedecked with a huge flag on the base of what had been a statue of Kaiser William L.

NE of the most spectacular views of the river anywhere can be taken in at the Niederwald Monument, almost a half mile above the town of Rildesheim, which was erected between 1877 and 1883 to mark the re-establishment of the German Empire. There, under a 32-ton bronze lady named "Germania" a militaristic version of the Statue of Liberty, equipped with an imperial crown and a sword - is Max Schneckenburger's "Watch on the Rhine," emblazoned in stone with its stentorian exhortation: "To the Rhine, to the Rhine, to the German Rhine! Who will be the protector of the mighty river?"

You expect to come across stuff like this in France or Britain, but somehow in Germany it seems the victorious Alhes might have angrily torn down such monuments after World War II. Generals Eisenhower and Patton were of course in a hurry to get eastward after crossing the Rhine at Remagen in 1945, so they may not have had time to think about the Niederwald Monument, which is probably just as well. Today it is a pilgrimage point for West German schoolchildren, who go more for the view and adjacent eagle farm than for its antiquated political message.

The Niederwald site is the clincher, in the opinion of Karl Baedeker, who ob-served in 1839: "Most travelers think they have seen the beauties of the Rhine when they have undertaken a quick journey up - and down - stream by steamship. It cannot be often enough repeated that no view can be more erroneous than this. However pretty the scenery may appear from the river, its finest charms are displayed only on the hills."

Now, if you live in Bonn, your quotidian encounters with the Rhine will not always have to do with its great beauty. First of all, it swells and floods in the spring, which is a bore for people who have their homes or apartments near its banks. Second, as conquerors going back to the Romans have discovered, it is an immense natural barrier; time is wasted waiting for the car ferries to make their wide arcs across the watercourse. Third, the weather is so consistently miserable in the implausible capital of the Federal Republic of Germany that the Rhine is usually glimpsed draped in a gray wet fuzz.

One night the fuzz lifted slightly as my family had just finished a pizza in Konigswinter on the right bank; we glimpsed a Rhine tourist steamer packed with elderly Germans doing the bunny-hop up and down the stairs, snaking through the decks. From our remote outpost, it was a hilarious comedy in mime since we couldn't hear the music but just watched the silent jumping - hop! hop! hop! The kids laughed all night. It occurred to me recently that famil-

Buenos Aires Combines European Elegance, Latin Flair

by Nora Scott Kinzer

UENOS AIRES — This is a cosmopolitan city, a sybarite's paradise of theaters, bookstalls, boutiques and culinary delights. That the Avenida 9 de Julio was designed to be slightly wider than the Champs-Elysées, that the Colon is one of the great opera houses of the world, that many porterios (residents of Buenos Aires) speak virtually unaccented French, all suggest that Buenos Aires is a truly worldly

It is also an underrated but marvelous treasure trove for shoppers. Style, flair and cachet are basic elements of life for porteños. For many, life in Buenos Aires focuses on the need to be au courant. The newest exercise class, the latest joke, the hottest style of psychotherapy and the most fashionable hemline length are matters of paramount importance. Fashion and fads help many residents block out Argentina's grim economic realities and the worst of its recent political excess. While Argentines have always been fashion-mad, their current mania for style hides anxiety. No wonder, then, that shops, boutiques, department stores and designers flourish in the capital of Latin America's most European nation. Many portetios cannot decide if they are Spanish, Italian or Latin American. Many of the city's eight million residents are in fact descended from English, Scottish, Irish or Lebanese immigrants. Nearly half a million residents are of East European Jew-

In any case, "home" often means Europe, and the porteños' cultural heritage is across the ocean. All things European - style, fads, fashions and quirks — are highly valued and are brought to Argentina by fashion magazines and video clips from designer shows.

Many shops specialize in designer imports from Europe, but tourists will find the best bargains in Argentine copies, which reflect their makers' European heritage in skill and pride of craft. Argentine seamstresses and energetic textile firms produce beautifully tailored clothes and elegant leather goods that rival those from Florence, Milan and

Tourists and porteños alike meander through the elegant shops of Calle Florida, which is closed to automobiles, but parteñas prefer the wide boulevard of Santa Fé, where they stroll in and out of the galerias to see

The Latin/European women of Buenos Aires are interesting anomalies in Latin America. In Argentina, women constitute 30 percent of the country's judges, nearly 40 percent of the lawyers, more than 40 percent of the medical doctors and more than half

For the tourist, bargains are everywhere because of constant inflation and the everdevalued peso. Unlike elsewhere in Latin America, blatant marketplace haggling is not welcome, but price cutting is a fine art in Buenos Aires: Discounts are automatic for traveler's checks, and there is more of a discount for payment in cash.

The profusion of Argentine cashmere sweaters (a good shop is Los 4 Ases, Calle Florida 519) and finely loomed Argentine tartan skirts will bedazzle and seduce any weary shopper. More seductive than anything else, though, is Argentine leather: purses, soft to the touch and easy on the bank account; delicious, silky suede skirts, suede coats and made-to-order suede evening dresses; items of calfskin, ostrich, crocodile, alligator, lizard, snake, even penguin leather. Remember that the word for "suede" in Latin American Spanish is "antilope." This high-quality leather is, however, from Argentine cattle and reflects the tradition of Italian craftsmanship. One good place to buy leather is Rossi Caruso at Santa Fé 1601, and Portolano, at Tucuman 1542.

Just as Italy forms the cultural heritage for Argentina's fine leathers, the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe serve as examples for Argentine furriers. Argentina's furs are one of the world's great bargains. Long, huxurious nutria coats sell for $600 and up; the $600 coat would sell in New York for $3,000. Another great buy is Patagonian fox. A fulllength Patagonian fox coat sells for $900 in Buenos Aires and retails in New York for $5,000. Most of the Argentine furriers can be found off Calle Florida. Tailored coats can be ordered based on a description or a photograph. One suggested shop for furs: Maximilian Pieles, M.T. de Alvear 676.

After fur shopping, there is still time to look for Argentine artifacts, gaucho belts, fine old English silver and French antiques (try the San Telmo Flea Market, Plaza Dorrego y Humberto, on Saturdays and Sundays), or sheepskin-lined men's suede jackets and hunting boots.

THE FREQUENT TRAVELER

Seeing the U.S. by Bus: Many Miles for Low Cost

By Paul Grimes

EW YORK -- There is a lot to be said for touring the United States by road instead of hopping about by air. If you have the time, bus travel can be an excellent way to find out what the country is like.

There are limitations, however. You can go only where the bus goes, and that elimi-nates a lot of the country that buses covered a few years ago. As far as possible, buses today ply the Interstate highways, many of which provide an uninspiring view. And it often is not easy to coordinate bus schedules to suit your tastes or to find acceptable meals and lodgings unless you plan ahead.

The unlimited-mileage coupon books that the Greyhound and Trailways systems sell for $150 and up are among the country's biggest travel bargains, considering that the Greyhound network embraces about 90,000 miles and Trailways's about one-third of that. You can get on or off a bus wherever you want (Greyhound serves 14,000 communities), traveling only an hour or two a day or crossing the country on a continuous 80-hour stretch. If such travel is your bent, however, don't wait too long. Under pressure from fare wars on many air routes and increasing long-distance use of the automobile as gasoline prices have dropped, bus travel is ailing. Greyhound, for example, says it carried 33 million passengers last year, compared with 54 million in 1980.

Based on my experiences and on talks with Trailways and Greyhound officials and other travelers, here are some questions that arise if you are considering rambling by bus.

What sort of nickets are available?
Probably the biggest unlimited-mileage bargain is the coupon book sold by Trailways for $10 a day with a 15- or 18-day minimum, depending on the city in which you buy it (it's 18 days in New York). Addi-tional days are also $10 each. Greyhound's best unlimited-mileage deal is its Ameripass, which costs $189 for 7 days, $249 for 15 days and $349 for 30 days, with extensions of each

Although its price is higher, Greyhound has the distinct advantage of many more routes, including acceptability of the Ameri-pass by Greyhound of Canada, where Trailways does not have cross-country routes. On routes where both networks operate, Greyhound usually has more frequent service. Greyhound and Trailways coupons are accepted by many connecting carriers, but not by one another.

I used my Ameripass for 12 distinct legs. If I had paid the normal one-way fare for each of them, my total Greyhound outlay would have been $557.45, instead of the $259 I paid for a 15-day pass plus a one-day extension.

Had I not had a pass, an alternative to paying one-way fares would have been a circle fare of $365, according to R.L. Wilson, Greyhound's vice president for traffic. The circle fare allows unlimited stopovers, but routing must be determined in advance. Wilson said such a ticket would have been honored on Trailways (or vice versa) on routes where Greyhound did not operate or did not have a convenient connection. What should you take along? Most important, travel light. You may have to do a lot of walking between bus depois and places to spend the night. Also, many depots do not have secure places to store baggage while you walk about town.

Trailways and Greyhound ticket offices offer free system maps, but the most essential tool for a bus rambler is a current Russell's Official National Motor Coach Guide, issued monthly by Russell's Guides Inc., 834 Third Avenue SE, Box 278, Cedar Rapids, Iowa 52406 (tel. 319-364-6138). A single copy costs $7.60 plus postage. It contains timetables of most intercity bus operators in the United States and Canada.

Greyhound has the advantage of more routes.

How should you pace the trip?

I avoid overnight bus travel because the seating is much too cramped to stretch out, and I covet at least the opportunity to see where I am going. Also, if you choose buses that are scheduled as "locals," they may either avoid Interstates or at least get off them frequently for stops.

To me, the thrill of rambling by bus is to see towns and cities as well as countryside. If you stop traveling by 3 or 4 P.M., that usually provides ample time to find the most suitable accommodations (which may in-volve consulting the local chamber of com-merce before it closes at 5). Where I had reservations, such as at bed and breakfasts, I sometimes arrived later. In smaller cities of historic interest, such as Fort Smith, Arkansas, I allowed several morning hours to see the principal sights. I did not travel every day: Two nights in cities like Louisville, Kentucky, or Minnespolis-St. Paul can be rewarding for a sightseer and allow time for handwashed clothing to dry. What are the buses and bus depots like?

The typical bus carries up to 43 passengers in reclining seats. It is air-conditioned (and often so cool that you might want to don a sweater). Federal regulations that limit smoking to cigarettes and only in the last three rows are often unobserved. The bus will have a toilet, but frequently without water or towels and recking of a disinfectant called Pot Shot. Big-city bus stations, al-though often in rundown neighborhoods, tend to be more pleasant than they were a

How do you eat and spend the night? Sometimes with difficulty. Bus depots are not necessarily close to restaurants or accommodations (especially modestly priced aces). Unless you determ that your needs can be met where you plan to stop for the day, you are taking a risk.

Veneto Villas: 'Utility and Consolation'

by Kate Singleton

ASTELFRANCO VENETO, Italy - In the early 15th century, when Venice was at the peak of its maritime power, the city's merchants and noticemen began to invest some of the profits from their trade with the East into land reclamation in the immediate hinterland areas. Coordinated agricultural activities prospered around the noble country ties prospered around the noble country house, and by the beginning of the 16th century the Venetian villa had adopted many of the features typical of the style in Venice itself: the frescoed façade, the large central salon around which the house gravitated, the walls decorated with frescoes, the ceilings with close-set beams that were also painted, the facilities for receiving and entertaining guests. This tradition culminated in the works of Andrea Palladio (1508-1590), the most investigate preparative of classicism most ingenious representative of classicism

Palladio, in his "Four Books of Architecture," has something to say about living in villas that is as applicable today as it was in his times: A gentleman "will find much utili-ty and consolation in villa life, where time will be spent overseeing and decorating his possessions, where improvements will be made with industry and the art of agricul-ture, where exercise on foot and horseback around the villa will keep the body fit and healthy, and where the mind latigued by city life will be restored and consoled in a quiet atmosphere that belits the study of letters

Those in search of "utility and consolation" would be advised to opt for something a little more recondite and a little less touristy than the intrinsically splendid villas along the Brenta. A good base would be the small, attractive fortified town of Castelfranco Veneto in the province of Treviso. Castelfranco is worth more than a cursory visit. The cathedral houses Giorgione's "Ma-donna and Child With Saints Francis and Liberale," and in the nearby Casa del Giorgione is a major frieze by the artist, who was born in Castelfranco.

The Teatro Accademico, designed by Francesco Maria Preti in the mid-1700s, will give you an idea of what a thriving intellectual center Castelfranco was during the En-lightenment. The Hotel Roma (tel. 495041) is comfortable though not particularly mem-orable. For an unforgettable meal, go to Da Barbesin (tel. 490446, closed Wednesdays and Thursdays), where the nienu is based on the area's celebrated radicchio (a sort of cookable red lettuce), artichokes, asparagus and funghi (a diabolical looking species of wild mushrooms).

HE real delight of Castelfranco Veneto, though, is that within a radius of less than 10 miles of beautiful countryside, you can visit a number of villas and their gardens, which will tell you a great deal about country living and country entertain-ment in this part of Italy from the mid-16th to the mid-19th century. Suitable theatrical and musical entertainments had to be devised to keep the assembled company occupied. These sometimes took place in a large hall or salon, but more often in the garden. According to the aristocratic family's financial resources, the shows could be professional entertainments or put on by local amateurs and the sets might vary from makeshift scenery or permanent structures built into the garden.

About two miles (three kilometers) from Castelfranco in the village Sant' Andrea oltre il Muson is a charming late-16th-century Villa Cornaro ora Chimmelli, which you can visit on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays when the owners are home. The house, which is not very big, looks out across a formal but intimately small garden toward the gate beyond and an evenue of trees with farmland on either side. The villa's façade is frescoed, as is the loggia behind the three arches to which the garden steps lead. In the early 1600s an audience in the garden would have watched entertainments taking place under the loggia. The frescoes would become part of the scene and, since they depict land-

Here you will find Villa Corner della Regina, designed by Francesco Maria Preti and Giovanni Miazzi in the 18th century to enlarge a previously existing building that you can still detect from the back. Villa Corner has a fine garden, some of it in the formal Italian style, embellished with groups of statues. You don't have to wait until the weekend to see it: The whole place has been turned into a luxury restaurant and hotel, with tennis courts, swimming pool, sama, hydromassage — in short, everything that "consolation" requires. The restaurant (closed Tuesdays) provides excellent meals in the local tradition (pasta e fagioli — a thick, tasty bean and pasta soup — snails, tripe, dishes with radicchio, and so on) as well as international cuisine, at about 70,000 lire ($50) for two. The hotel suites cost 200,000 to 250,000 lire a night (tel.

Toward the end of the 1700s, the English school of landscape gardening began to in-fluence garden design in Treviso. The main exponent of what was called "il giardino romantico" was Francesco Bagnara, a renowned stage designer. Some of Basmara's finest gardens, now publicly owned, have been allowed to get a bit dilapidated, but the gardens of Palazzo Revedin Bolasco at Castelfranco are still worth seeing. They are open Tuesdays, Saturdays and the first Sunday of each month, 3:30-6:30 P.M. May through September and 2-5 P.M. October

If you do not want to go back into Castel-franco, however, continue toward Venices (there are many splendid villas on the Terraglio road) until you come to Mogliano raglio road) until you come to Mogliano Veneto, where you turn for Zerman. Remyou will find Villa Condulmer, which has been turned into a hotel. Its gardens are also in the informal, "romantic" style, with grace ful fake ruins placed to "improve" the boals landscape (which now incindes an 18-hot golf course, tennis courts, a pool and the bles). The 18th-century villa once belonged to the superintendent of the Teatro La Remisice in Venice, and Guiseppe Verdi is said the have finished composing "La Traviata" as guest here. Rooms cost 50,000 to 115,000 lies (tel. 457100).

It is less austere than Villa Emo, with a long alley leading to the main, residence, which is on the same level as the barchesse on both sides. The dovecotes only each end of the barchesse are a familiant feature, but here they have been disguised behind a huge sundial on the one side and zodiac circle on the other. The relationship between villa, garden and surrounding countryside is remarkably harmonious. Inside the villa there are frescoes by Paolo Veronesa. Open Tuesdays, Saturdays and Sundays, 3-6 P.M. April through September, 2-5 P.M. October through March.

As a last, fitting indulgence for eye and palate, continue from Maser to Asolo and stay at Villa Cipriani, and dine in the gardens overlooking the countryside. Il Drappo, near Piazza Farnese in the heart of old Rome, is a Sardinian restaurant with a difference. Paolo and Valentina Tolu, the brother and sister team that runs this small successful restaurant, use many typical Sardinian products, such as mallor-eddus and tallarinus pastas or carta da mu-sica, the paper-thin Sardinian unleavened bread, but work them with pronounced culinary imagination.

A selection of antipasti is followed by first courses, or primi, that include a grain soup with potatoes, lima beans and corn, or pasta with lamb. Main dishes vary daily. A recent dinner included turkey with pine nuts and raisins, lamb with fennel seed, highly professional.

A few years ago, Alberto Ciarla was a small, out-of-the-way Trastevere fish restaurant that had little to recommend it.

frita, a fried dumpling stuffed with soft cheese and covered with honey. The Sardinian wines are excellent.

If you are looking for a quick meal, Il Canto del Riso is not for you; rapid service is not one of its qualities. Bot once you board this twin-terraced barge anchored on the Tiber River just above the Cavour Bridge, you won't want to eat in a hurry.

The restaurant's speciality is rice; in-deed, its name means "The Rice Song" and the menn includes a variety of risottos. such as risotto "sea and mountain style" (with shrimp and porcini) or with scallops, with lemon and caviar, with lobster, with creamed scampi and so on. Pasta specialties include barettine "river style" with tuna and rucola, spaghetti with clams and fettuccine with creamed bell peppers.

Enigma of French Basque Country

by Erik de Mauny

AYONNE, France - Of all the regions of France, few provide such a strange amalgam of the very ancient and the aggressively modern as the Basque country, and none has such an enigmatic past.

The enigma arises from the origins of the Basque people and their language, of which almost nothing is known. The Basques call their homeland Euzkadi, and at intervals linguists and philologists from places as re-mote as Japan and the Georgian Soviet Re-public have tried to establish links between Basque and their own languages. But although a few puzzling similarities in vocabulary have been noted, these are too tennous to prove an actual link. The accepted view is that the Basques are the earliest indigenous people of the Pyrenees, having settled there countless centuries before the first waves of Indo-European migration.

There are three Basque provinces on the French side of the Pyrences — Labourd, Basse Navarre and Soule — and four on the Spanish side, and what they have in common is a fierce sense of national identity, their highly complicated language and a deep at-tachment to certain customs and pastimes, such as the traditional Basque game of pe-lote, which they have made peculiarly their Bayonne, where I started my peregrina-tion, is not really a Basque town, although it is an important administrative and economic center, and has a handsome Basque museum, clearly illustrating the long heritage of the people, their beliefs and customs, and their ndicrafts and decorative arts. In the Musee Bonnat, there is a remarkably fine collection of drawings and paintings. Bayonne also has undeniable charm, with its cathedral, built between the 13th and 19th centuries, soaring above steep, narrow streets, including the arcaded Rue Port Neuf, where there are several elegant confiseries, choco-late-making being a local specialty.

In the foothills behind Bayonne, one begins to enter the real Basque country: neat villages of stocky white-walled houses with red-tiled roofs, where in the local cafés visitors are more likely to hear Basque spoken than French. There is also scarcely a village that does not have its own pelote court with pale pink front wall, a reminder that pelote in its various manifestations — whether played bare-handed or with the chistera, the scoop-shaped wicker racket that propels the ball with dazzling velocity against the front wall, or in more recondite forms such as rebot, with the opposing teams facing each other is not so much a sport as a national obses-

There are, too, reminders of a more martial kind. This was the military highway for invasion and counterinvasion between France and Spain, until in November 1659 the two countries ended their long rivalry by signing the Treaty of the Pyrénées. In June 1660, a dynastic seal was set upon the treaty by the marriage of the 21-year-old Louis XIV of France to the Infanta Marie-Thérèsa of Austria daughter of Philip IV of Spain of Austria, daughter of Philip IV of Spain. They were married in Saint-Jean-de-Luz, in the church of Saint John the Baptist. It remains a supreme example of Basque eccle-siastical architecture, with its towering wooden galleries for the male congregation, and its superb reredos in the Spanish High Baroque style. Worth visiting, too, is the house where Louis stayed while awaiting his nuptials, the town mansion of a rich shipbuilder called Lohobiague.

Saint-Jean-de-Luz is still a busy fishing port, although less so now than in former the far northern seas and even ventured as less picturesque, but there is an attractive far as Newfoundland. But the Treaty of the river, the swift-flowing Saison, winding Pyrénées did not prevent Napoleon from occupying Spain 150 years later. And a few miles inland from Bayonne stands a gray granize obelisk commenorating the rearguard battles of the French under Marshal Soult, in the last stages of the Peninsula War, against the vistorieus advance of Marshal This Franch side of the Pyrénées has always been a country of shepherds (many of whom emigrated to the middle and western against the victorious advance of Welling-

Between Bayonne and Saint-Jean-de-Luz. lies Biarritz, its fame as a fashionable watering place first established by the Empress Engenie, whose example was quickly fol-lowed by other crowned heads. Today, it swarms with visitors of less exalted status, and the narrow comiche road round the bay offers one of Europe's more spectacular traf-

To find the true flavor of the Basque country, it is best to abandon this vehicular extravaganza and travel intand, taking the winding road up from Bayonne to Saint-Jean-Pied-de-Port, capital of Basse Navarre, and then on to Maniéon-Licharre in Soule. Saint-Jean-Pied-de-Port is so named because it was the last staging post on the French side for pilgrims making the long trek to Santiago de Compostella, in northwestern Spain. Crowned by a rugged forwestern Spain. Crowned by a rugged for-tress, it is a lively little town where visitors can find sheepskin jerkins and the softest of wool-lined slippers, fine linen tablecloths and napkins, and a variety of delicious con-fits, of goose, duck, pork, and above all, of palambes, the gray wood-pigeon netted in the nearby valleys. Mauléon-Licharre, center of the sparsely converted province of Smle is the sparsely populated province of Soule, is United States in the last century), but also of smugglers and passeurs. During World War II, they helped many refugees and Allied soldiers and airmen escape from Occupied France into Spain. But then, the Basques, for all their strong love of home, have also always had an equally strong predilection for far-flung adventure (the first sea captain to circumavigate the globe was a Basque), if not always of a strictly legal nature. In former times, for example, Saint-Jean-de-Luz was not only a nuclor fishing port but a notorious haven for consists and freebooters.

In recent years, the Basque country as a whole has been troubled by illegal activities of another kind, in the bombings and assassinations carried out by ETA (the Basque smations carried out by ETA (the Basque initials for Basque Homeland and Liberty), a separarist guerrilla organization. And the policy adopted by the current French government of expelling suspected members of ETA from French territory has aroused some fears of reprisals and an escalation of violence. But the risks are minimal and the travalle of a leisurely exploration of the rewards of a leisurely exploration of the French Basque country are considerable.

ments about this neighbor of mine, and that I ought to re-educate myself. So I set out to be a tourist on the Rhine. Naturally, one of the first chings a tourist does on the Rhine is to take a Rhine cruise. Starting at the wrong end of the river, I clambered one Saturday at 5:30 P.M. shoard the Nederland in Nijmegen, a pleasant uich city on the Waal, which is what the tich call the lower branch of the Rhine pefore it dumps into the sea. Just as in Arabic there are countless words for describing a camel (a sleeping camel, a thirsty camel, etc.) so the Dutch have concocted a proliferation of terms for the branches of the Rhine - the Nederrijn (Lower Rhine), the Kromme Rija (Curving Rhine), the Oude Rijn (Old Rhine) and, mysteriously, the Lek.

Cruising on the Rhine was one of the first intimations of what today is called mass tourism. In the early 19th century, the British were the initial large-scale converts to steaming up the Rhine, and were served by the Prussian Rhine Steamship Company, the forerunner of today's highly efficient Koln-Disseldorfer line.

Sliding out of Nijmegen, where the breeze

Till has a taste of the sea to it, the Nederland made hardly any noise at all; it was only evident we were moving because Nijmegen was slipping away. I had to repair to my ample cabin on the Lorelei deck — above the lowest deck, called the Rhineland deck, which is a little cramped — to hear the great river slapping softly below. There's no steam, no fire, no pre-takeoff sensation on the Nederland. Yonder on the grassy banks, brown and white cows grazed in a landscape whose foreground, graced by the occasional windmili, could have been limmed by Pieter Brueghel the Elder, the scattering of smokestacks and high-rises in the background owed their inspiration to the Industrial Revolution.

The stretch between Rotterdam and Duisburg, the West German steel city, is the busiest for the hulking burges and tankers that labor up and down the Rhine. There are 12,000 of these water-going industrial mon-sters; the biggest fleet belongs to the Dutch, followed by the West Germans, the Belgians. the French and the Swiss. While I'm no Rhine romantic, I find the sight of these chugging vessels almost as evocative as the appearance of a felucca's sail on the Nile. My imagination tends to invest Rhine captains with an aura of adventure.

Marksburg, a 12th-century castle at Braubach.

To get a better grasp on reality, I headed up to the Nederland's pilot deck, and found Gottfried Kaufer, a ruddy white-haired veteran of the river, in conversation with a passing tanker baptized magically the Alchimist Basel. "Three to one for Argentina," crackled a radio voice. They were taking bets on West Germany's chances the following on west Germany's chances the following evening in the World Cup soccer final in Mexico. Not a bad guess for the tanker captain — the Argentines won 3-2; not as picturesque as a felucea, either.

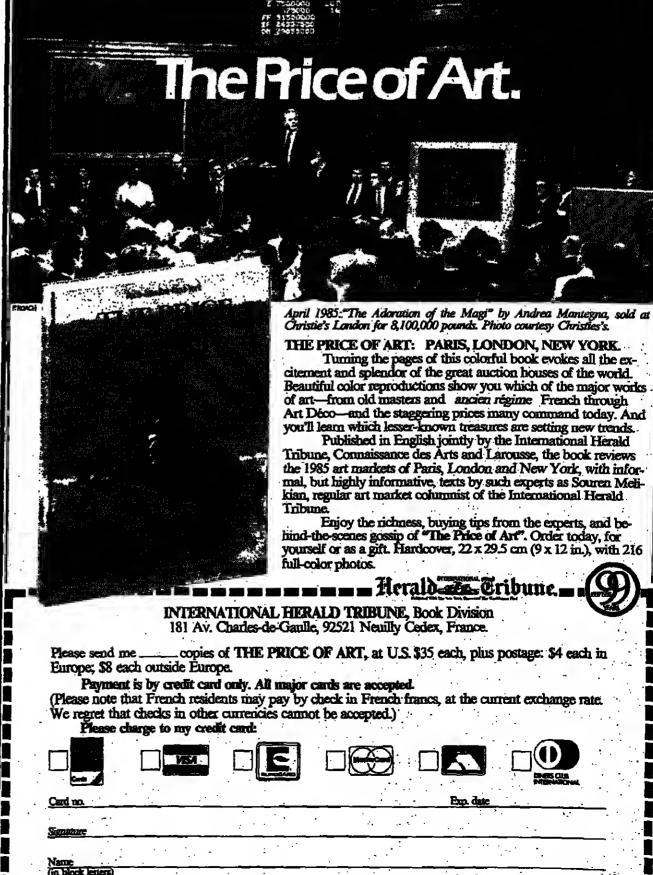

On the bank our hushed progress was marked by the passing of large billboards that give the kilometer distance from the Hook of Holland to the bridge over the Rhine at Constance; the tenths of a kilometer are gauged with smaller postings and half kilometers with a black cross that to the ignorant might look like a sign of riverine piety. From where Kaufer sat, the Rhine seemed pretty much under control. On the starboard side, a gray, armed launch of the West German frontier police puttered up to check passports.

One of the features of the Nederland is a small swimming pool on the upper deck and a chess board with large, waist-high pieces. I passed up the pool but was checkmated by a polite teen-ager from Brazil Later, dinner was a competently served broiled sirioin steak with fried omions.

The best part of the evening was being jiggled to sleep in my cabin by the Nederland as it trembled over the Rhine. I was awakened at 5:40 A.M. by the orange sun rising over a riparian sign telling me that we were 730 kilometers (about 450 miles) from Constance. Church bells were tolling in some distant village. At 9:15 A.M. we docked in Cologne, practically under the beetling shadow of the city's great cathedral. To my genuine regret, my Rhine cruise had come to its

Prices were mixed in active trading of American Stock Exchange issues.

"We had a sharp drop in the morning and began creeping back with a few buy programs kicking the Dow into the plus territory," said Hildegard Zagorski of Prudential-Bache Securities. "But the market is still in the process of consolidating recent gains."

She said the bond market "backed off a touch, and that may have led to another round of selling" that brought the Dow below Wednesday's closing level.

"The oil group that provided leadership in the market's upward move got hit this morning with negative sell recommendations from both Merrill and E.F. Hutton," said Trude Latimer of Josephthal & Co. She said the negative reports were based on the belief that oil would not reach the $20-a-barrel level in the immediate future.

"There was some profit-taking and some people followed the [sell] advice," Ms. Latimer said. In addition, she said, there was some pressure on technology stocks after a Morgan Stanley report that lowered its earnings estimate for International Business Machines.

"I don't think IBM is reacting all that badly because many portfolio managers are not in this week," she said.

The Slump in Doll Sales . Sales of Cabbage Patch dolls by Coleco, in millions of dollars.

Coleco Sets Its Sights Beyond the Cabbage Patch

By John Crudele New York Times Service

From June to December Selfrages

Sources: Cologo Industries Inc.; Industry

NEW YORK -- Coleco Industries Inc.'s new Manhattan showroom is like a fantasy world populated by Wrinkles puppies, toy Rambos and those fabulously successful Cabbage Patch Kids.

A fantasy-come-true is precisely what Coleco has been living through the last three years, as the Cabbage Patch dolls and accessories produced a staggering $1.2 billion in revenues. Now, however, reality is setting in as demand for the dolls finally cools off. Coleco, based in West Hartford, Connecticut, will probably sell only $250 million worth of Cabbage Patch items this year, less than half the $600 million sold in 1985. And while sales of a quarter-billion dollars for any toy are still more than acceptable, the decline is leaving a gaping hole in Coleco's financial results, since sales last year only totaled $776

The consensus on Wall Street is that Coleco will show minimal profits, if any, this year, after earning $64 million in 1985. Development costs for new products and a rebate program to prop up the Cabbage Patch line will probably result in a second-half loss, analysts say, offsetting the $6.8-million profit of the first half. Fourteen percent of the company's Hartford employees have already here led off

Yet the company's past ability to offset disasters, such as its Adam computer, with overwhelming successes, such as its Cabbage Patch Kids, has created a mystique about its skill in weathering hard times.

"There are some exceedingly clever and resourceful people at Coleco," said Harry E. Wells, who tracks the company for Adams, Harkness & Hill Inc. "What the hot product will be next year at Coleco, I don't know. But you can bet that Coleco will have one."

Coleco's next generation of toys includes Rambo action figures, based on the popular Sylvester Stallone movies; Furskins, bear-like stuffed dolls developed by Xavier Roberts, the Cabbege Patch creator; Wrinkles, a Shar-Pei-like dog with oversized skin; and Alf, which Coleco will only say stands for "allen

One big seller could be an electronic ver-sion of Wrinkles, which reportedly is being ordered heavily by Toys R Us, the big American toy chain.

Ironically, Coleco became tied to Cabbage Patch's fortunes while it was in the middle of a campaign to make itself less reliant on any one product.

"We made a decision in the very early 1980s," said Arnold C. Greenberg, Coleco's chairman and chief executive officer. "We said to ourselves, we don't want to be all in one thing. We want to balance our product

But the cash generated by the Cabbage Patch dolls also permitted the company to diversify, both through acquisitions and the development of new products, analysts say, Coleco recently purchased Selchow & Righter, the maker of such popular board games as Scrabble, Parcheesi and Trivial Pursuit. The Wrinkles puppy line came via the recent acquisition of Leisure Dynamics Inc.

is in talks for another major acquisition in the toy business that will expand its reach into foreign markets.

Mr. Greenberg, 53, and the president, J.

Brian Clarke, 46, want Coleco to become a company with predictable sources of earnings. They hope Cabbage Patch will attain the longevity of Mattel's Barbie doll, a favorite of children for more than two decades, and they want other toys that will sell consistently year-in and year-out like Coleco's standby plastic wading pools and tricycles. Founded by the Greenberg family in 1932

as a leathercraft company, Coleco has evolved into one of the nation's best-known toy makers. But in so doing, it has often stumbled, sometimes badly, as with the illfated Adam personal computer and the fad-dish video games of the last decade.

"Coleco is like a cat with nine lives," said Mr. Wells of Adams, Harkness. He said about a third of those lives have been used up. Many experts originally hailed the Adam as the forerunner of a computer-in-every-home trend. Instead, Coleco took longer than expected to develop the Adam, and missed the crucial 1983 Christmas selling season. And then the personal computer industry ran aground as consumers failed to be convinced that they needed the machines in their homes. "Adam was an extraordinary opportunity;

we all believe the product was right," Mr. Greenberg says even today. "It could have happened, and had it happened on time it could have changed the home computer in-

U.S. Indicators Increased by 1.1% in July

WASHINGTON -The government's main gauge of future economic health rose a strong 1.1 percent in July after two months of decline, the Commerce Department said Thursday, providing what one analyst called "good but not great" news for the sluggish

The gain in the forward-pointing Index of Leading Indicators was bigger than most private economists had expected

But the report also revised June's index sharply downward — from a 0.3-percent increase to a 0.4-percent decline — perhaps making the July increase look misleadingly large by comparison.

"It's good but not great," said David Wyss, chief financial econo-mist for Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Massachusetts. "The downward revision of June just about offsets the big jump in July."

Lawrence Chimerine, president of Chase Econometrics, also saw httle reason for cheering.

"This is consistent with the general pattern we have been seeing," he said. "The economy isn't getting any worse. It is growing very slowly and there is no evidence that this pattern is changing.

"We would need several more months of significant increases and more widespread gains in the com-ponents to indicate the economy was accelerating," he added.

But the White House spokesman, Larry Speakes, offered a more upbeat assessment. These new figures give us reason to believe that our optimism for stronger economic growth in the second half of the year is warranted," he said.

Private analysts have no doubt the U.S. economy is growing more rapidly in the current July-September quarter than the barely visible 0.6-percent annual rate of the April-June quarter.

However, most are predicting growth the rest of this year and in early 1987 at about a 2.5 percent to 3 percent rate — roughly the same as the modest pace of the past two

The leading indicators, a compilation of 11 figures from various areas of the economy, was given its biggest boost in July by substantial increases in the money supply and in the rate of new business forma-

Other positive indicators included slower business deliveries and higher raw-materials prices - both indicative of a business pickup an increase in contracts and orders for new plant and equipment, a rise in outstanding credit and a de-crease in initial unemployment

Negative indicators included declines in stock prices, building permits and new orders for cons goods and materials, while there was no change in the average work

Surplus Widens On West German Current Account

WIESBADEN, West Germaov - West Germany's currentaccount surplus widened in July to a provisional 5.8 billion Deutsche marks ($2.8 billion) from 4.3 billion DM in June, a spokesman for the Federal Statistics Office said Thursday.

The June surplus in the cur-rent account, which includes trade in merchandise and services and fees, had been revised from an estimate of 4.2 billion

The statistics office also reported that the July merchandise trade surplus was a record 10.9 billion DM, compared with 9.9 billion DM in June. The previous record, registered in April, was 10 billion DML in July last year, the currentaccount surplus was 3.2 billion DM and the trade surplus was 6.8 billion. Imports in July were 34.53 billion DM, compared with exports of 45.42 billion DM. Imports rose 0.2 percent from June and exports rose 2.3 percent.

The ITC's unanimous ruling Wednesday means the Commerce Department must determine by Dec. 23 whether those countries have dumped urea on the U.S. market at prices below the cost of production. Urea is \(\varepsilon \) solid nitrogen fertilizer used on corn, wheat, rice, cotton and other crops. 29 13 122 34 COCOA Sferting Sep Dec Mor Moy Jiy Sep Dec Volu COCOA franch fra 1,395 1,453 N.T. BP Reports 38% Drop In 2d-Quarter Earnings

LONDON - British Petroleum Co, said Thursday that secondquarter net income plunged 38 percent from a year earlier because of special costs and the effects of the "dramatic" decline in oil prices BP, majority owner of Standard Oil Co. of the United States, said net income fell to £214 million (about $319 million at current rates) in the second quarter from £344 million a year earlier. The results reflected a £316-million charge for writing down the value of inventories and the costs of a reorganization at its U.S. subsidiary, BP said.

Revenue for the quarter was not reported. Based on first-quarter results, however, BP's revenue fell 37.3 percent from a year earlier, to 66.22 billion from £9.92 billion.

BP said its results "reflected the dramatic decline in oil prices during 1986, which led to much lower earnings from oil exploration and production and to inventory losses over the quarter."

Calculated on the more optimistic replacement-cost basis, BP's earnings rose about 4 percent, to £579 million, in the second quarter from £548 million a year earlier. Replacement-cost operating profit excludes inventory holding gains and losses, interest expense, taxation and minority interests.

These figures excluded Standard Oil results, which, when included ranslated into a £91-million loss, compared with a £645-million profit a year earlier, BP said.

"These results show that, in spite of the problems caused by a turbulent oil market and severely depressed prices, the financial position of the BP group remains strong," said BP's chairman, Sir "For oil prices and markets, the outlook for the second half of the year is still very uncertain," he said. Sir Peter said BP is reviewing budgets and that he expects "to see less spent on exploration and production during the remainder of the BP's North Sea oil production dropped 9 percent, or 46,000 barrels to 455,000 barrels a day, in the second quarter, because of scheduled maintenance shutdowns. But this was offset by a 21-percent increase, to 240,000 barrels a day, in BP's foreign production, primarily in (Reuters, AFP, UPI)

Ericsson Posts 28% Fall in First-Half Profit

By Juris Kaza onal Herald Tribine

STOCKHOLM - L.M. Ericsson, the Swedish telecommunications and office automation group, reported Thursday that its pretax earnings fell 28 percent in the first half of 1986, to 461 million kronor (about $66.6 million) from 644 milion kronor a year earlier, despite the benefits of a one-time gain. The company said its results inchided nonrecurring capital gains of 163 million kronor, up from 170 million kronor in the first half of Ericsson also said it would cut about 4,800 jobs over the next two years, including 2,000 to be laid off at its Ericsson Information Systems unit over the next 12 months. The EIS unit has already lost 4,000 jobs in earlier cuts.

The remaining 2,800 jobs would be cut at its Public Telecommunications unit, representing a 10-perforce of its biggest unit, the compa-munications business combined ny said.

In an interim report, the company said it expected a gradual improvement in group profitability in the second half of 1986 and through 1987. But Ericsson indicated that although the operating result was improving at EIS, the un-profitable unit would not return to profitability before 1988.

In 1985, EIS had an operating loss of 806 million kronor.

The company reported that group sales edged up 2 percent in the half, to 15.2 billion kronor. EIS sales dropped to 4.7 billion kronor from 4.9 billion kronor a year earlier, while Public Telecommunica-tions sales increased to 5.2 billion kronor from 4.8 billion kronor. INTERVENTION: How America Became Involved in Vietnam

By George McT. Kahin. 550 pages. $24.95. Alfred A. Knopf, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

O N Memorial Day, President Ronald Reagan delivered one of his favorite succinct summations about the lessons to be learned from the Vietnam trauma: American troops fought "a terrible and vicious war without enough support from home." On other occasions the president says it was "a war our troops were not allowed to win."

Professor George McT. Kahin of Cornell University, a veteran scholar on the subject, seeks to demonstrate that from an early stage in its involvement the United States was locked into a losing cause. By 1966, he maintains in "Intervention," the United States had made all of its basic miscalculations, and he ends his study there. That was long before American support for the war crumbled, and almost a decade hadow the improvinces flight of the last decade before the ignominious flight of the last Americans by helicopter from the roof of the U.S. embassy in Saigon.
His basic theme of wholly incompatible politics, cultures and interests is not unique, for it is part of every history of the war Kahin, however, concentrates on this interaction as the least fully explored portion of the experience, and by drawing on four decades of research and 12,000 pages of declassified documents amplifying the Pentagon Papers, gives us much deeper insight — especially from the Vietnamese perspective.

The United States, Kahin asserts in his summation, denied to the South Vietnamese what it proclaimed to be the main objective of the war, "to insure that the South Vietnamese have the right and opportunity to control their own destiny." From Washington, American power and resources were employed to shape South Vietnam "into an instrument supportive of U. S. strategic and geopolitical objectives," rather than South Vietnamese objec-

His examples go far beyond the installation and overthrow of Ngo Dinh Diem as Saigon's ruler and other well-publicized American in-terference in Saigon's leadership choices. To

Solution to Previous Puzzle

Americans, Kahin points out, allowing Sont Vietnam to control its destiny meant freedom from North Vietnam's Communist reach. But to Saigon's leaders it also meant freedom from American control or direction - all the way up to freedom to decide how to fight the war, or quit it. If the United States had permitted real self-determination to operate in Saigon, Kahin points out, the Buddhist majority probably would have taken South Vietnam out of the word. That is received, when American officials. war. That is precisely what American officials

Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge said in a feared. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge said in a White House meeting in 1965. "I don't think we ought to take this government seriously. There is simply no one who can do anything. We have to do what we think we ought to do regardless of what the Saigon government does. . . We have the right and the duty." From the American viewpoint, the United States was the loosidedly frustrated party, re-States was the lopsidedly frustrated party, repeatedly balked by the inability of Saigon's revolving governments to win the "hearts and minds" of the South Vietnamese people, to develop democracy, and to fight the war effec-

There is notable relevancy here for ongoing American foreign policy, even though the Rea-gan administration insists that congressional fears about stumbling into "another Vietnain" are sheer fantasy. Wherever the United States accords the accolade of "freedom fighter" to the foreign forces it recruits or supports, it runs some risk that it may become hostage to its own thetoric.

Kahin, who has tought at Cornell since 1951, raised official Washington's hackles in 1967 with the earlier history he co-authored, "The United States in Vietnam." He is likely to do so again. This is not light summer reading; it is heavy with complex American-South Vietnamneavy win complex American-South vietnamese collision, collusion and cross intrigue. But even generalists will find absorbing reading in this full documentation on Lyndon B. Johnson's weeks of agonizing over his decision to send major U.S. combat forces into Vietnames of the first time in 1965 often the American for the first time in 1965, after the American bombing of the North failed to slow the Viet Cong. This was a critical decision for Johnson.
Kahin obtained amplifying declassified accounts that show Johnson probing his advisers far more thoroughly than he is generally credit. ed with doing.

If he put in "10,000 more men" now, John son said, he could be told later "you need 500,000 more." Only Undersecretary of State George W. Ball had a clear-cut alternative, "cut losses" and quit, even though South View nam could fall. The other choices: "maintain nam could fall. present force and lose slowly," or "add 100,000 men" and "more next year," risking high casaalties and maybe "a long war without victory."

Twenty-one years later, the actual loss to both the United States and South Vietnam on the course taken is still being totaled. It is tantalizing to speculate on what the American public reaction would have been if Johnson had revealed these options, along with the true state of the war and of the fundamental Was ington-Sargon incompatibilities.

Murrey Marder, who reported on the diploma-cy of the Vietnam War for The Washington Post throughout the 1960s and 1970s, wrote this review for the Post.

By Alan Truscott

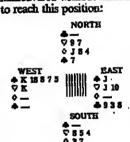

On the diagramed deal from play in a regional tournament, the co-champions in the women's pair event were balanced on a knife-edge be-tween triumph and disaster.

The bidding seemed likely to stop at a low level, but both sides found a fit and persevered. In one sense, East-West were right to bid four spades, because that contract fails by one trick and four diamonds

But North pushed on to five diamonds. This would have been beaten by a heart lead, allowing that suit to be un-blocked. But West led the spade two, showing an odd number of cards in the part- but South did not read the ponership style. East correctly diagnosed a seven card suit, and on taking the ace, shifted to a heart. This was, in theory, too late but an endgame problem loomed. South took the heart ace and maneuvered without difficulty

A heart lead at this point would have endplayed West, sition correctly. She led to her club ten, and West sei opportunity to throw her heart king with decisive effect.

More Americans Spin Their (Bike) Wheels

By Samuel Abt

COLORADO SPRINGS --- At first Alain Bondue was puzzled by motorists here who kept giving him a thumbs-up signal as he trained for the world cycling championships, which began

Back home in France, said the track champion, nobody pays much attention to cyclists out training. "I didn't understand what they meant until I saw the signs all over town telling people to make us feel welcome," he explained. "I never knew before that Americans cared so much about cycling and cyclists."

Increasingly they do, and they have created something of a boom in bicycling. It has been a long, uphill climb, but bicycling officials, riders, promoters and salesmen say the sport is approaching a peak.

A big push toward reaching it would be a dazzling performance in the world championships, something akin to the nine medals that the U.S. team won at the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles. That performance, on natinnal television, started the sport's boom.

Although hundreds of American and foreign journalists are expected at these championships, no major network television coverage has been arranged for the 16 events. They are bringing together a record 700 male and female riders from 62 countries. That is another record, exceeding the 50 countries represented last year in Italy.

The championships are an annual event that began in Chicago in 1893 but were last staged in the United States in 1912, at Newark, New Jersey.

U.S. hopes are particularly high this year because of both the home advantage, including cheer-ing, and the U.S. riders familiar-ity with the altitude. The 7-Eleven Velodrome, where track competition will take place, is 6,100 feet (1,859 meters) above sea '---', and the Air Force Acadenry, where the road races will be held, is at 7,210 feet.

Bicycling magazine predicted this month that U.S. riders would win 10 medals and establish the country as an international power. Most other observers consid-

[In qualifying races Wednes-day, Michael Huebner of East Germany and Connie Paraskevin of the United States set world records in the men's and women's 200-meter sprints, The Associated Press reported from Colorado Springs. Huebner was timed in 10.118 seconds and Paraskevin in

A big boost for U.S. cycling came in July with Greg LeMond's victory in the Tour de France. He was the first American to win the world's oldest, richest and most important bicycle road race. "It's like the first time man walked on the moon and suddenly people realized it could be said Josh Lehman, an official at the U.S. Cycling Federa-

There is no doubt that for both competition and recreation, more Americans than ever are turning to bicycling. At the Bicycle Manufacturers Association in Washingtnn, Michael Kershnw, a spokesman, reported that U.S. sales this year were expected to be the best in more than a decade.

At the six-month point he said, sales had reached 6.6 million bicycles, ahead of the 5.8 million at mid-1985. That year ended with 11.4 million sales valued at $1.5 billion. Sales were second only to the record 15.2 million of 1973, when Americans began seeking ways to beat the high cost

Many of these bicycles are being sold to commuters, whose numbers have tripled to nearly two million in a decade, according to the Bicycle Federation of

A much larger group, including the elderly, rides solely for health benefits. "Abont 78 millinn Americans ride a bicycle at least once a month, making it the No. 2 leisure activity in the country" after swimming, said Mi-chael Aisner, organizer of the Coors Classic race.

The big loser has been jogging. Across the country, bicycle sales-men echo the words of Gretchen Moreno, assistant manager of The Bicycle Outfitter in Los Altos, California. "I love to see jog-gers come in here with their bodies beat to hell — knee problems, heel problems, shin problems," she said. "It's not hard to convince them that they'll get the same exercise on a bicycle with none of the problems." Competitive racing is having the same growth, according to the U.S. Cycling Federation. Lehman, director of programs for the federation, said that membership had grown from nearly 7,500 in 1979 to more than 22,000. Membership, which costs $28 annually to riders over 14, is mandatory to compete in sauc-tioned races, which jumped from 692 in 1980 to 1,131 last year.

"There's been a huge growth in riding at the collegiate level," said Russell Mead, who rides at Stanford University and is an altertrial scheduled in the world championships Thursday.

College teams are especially prominent in the lvy League, in northern California and in the Rocky Mountains.

Race organizers affirmed the new popularity. "We've drawn unbelievable crnwds," said Aisner, whose two-week Coors Classie ended Sunday. "It's been phenomenal, at least 25 percent ahead of last year, when we drew 400,000 and there was nowhere we went that we were not full-house." Similarly, attendance was estimated to have doubled to 200,000 in the second year of the Core States Championship, the one-day professional road championship. Held this spring in Philadelphia, the race was organized by David Chauner, who will also run the Cititour race on Sept. 14 from Goshen, New York, to the United Nations building in Manhattan.

The purse in the Coors reached $100,000 this year, the same total that Channer paid for the Core States, the world's richest oneday race. All this growth has created a lucrative market. Aisner estimated that souvenir sales of T-shirts, water bottles and caps during the Coors Classic would be up 63 percent this year, to nearly $250,000.

Clothing sales are valued at more than $30 million annually.

Pity the New Taxpayers

By Russell Baker TEW YORK - First it was Hughie huddled on my door-step. "Alms," he cried. "Alms for a poor sufferer who begs a pallet in Hughie the real-estate czar, des-perate for a place to sleep? Impos-sible. A fortnight ago he had boasted of vast sums invested in condominiums, of a rajah's wealth in Manhattan apartment houses.

"If oot a pallet, dear friend, grant me at least a bare board under a tiny air-conditioner."

Once, desperate for an apart-meot in Manhattan, I asked Hughie if he could get the price on his cheapest apartment dowo slightly from $750,000. "No way." he had said. "That apartment is already underpriced. The living room has a window."

Now this proud man told a tale of ruin. The oew tax bill was the death knell of the real-estate busi-oess, for it required Hughie to pay taxes. "Did you ever hear of any-thing so unfair?"

I felt ashamed. Why should Hughie be destroyed by taxes while I was permitted to survive? But I remembered a lesson he'd taught me. Once I had said it was unfair that he paid practically oo tax at all while I paid so much I couldn't afford an apartment with a window in the living room, and Hughie said: "Sure it's unfair. So what? Life is unfair."

Such a manly reply. So bottom-line. And so right for me at the time, too. It was shameful to whimper and whine about my unfair tax hurden. Suppose John Wayne had heard me acting like a sissy.

Hughie's "Life is unfair" had spared me. In a subtle way he had been saying "Don't ever let John Wayne see you sniveling about a little thing like being unfairly taxed, or you'll never forgive your-

I had always been grateful to Hughie for that. Now at last, as he hoddled on my doorstep pleading for a pallet, I could repay the favor. "Yes, Hughie," I said, "taxing you is unfair. But never forget: Life is unfair." To illustrate the point, I kicked his huddled form off my doorstep, tossed an unmade pallet out the window and urged him to use it on the open range where he could be

You don't understand," he said. "When you're unfairly taxed, oobody but you has to suffer. But when I'm unfairly taxed, my incentive to build is destroyed, so everybody who wants a $750,000 apartment with a window in the living room has to suffer."

Next day I saw Siggie standing on a street corner selling pencils. "Siggie," I said, "do you realize that if Congress makes Hughie pay taxes, I will never again be able to covet an apartment I can't afford?" Siggie shrugged in despair. I was appalled. "Siggiel They're not going to tax you, too?"

Yes. Those were tears in the eyes

"If you really want to stop the Russians," he said, "you'll write your congressman a plea to double your taxes so I can regain my incen-tive to defeat Communism." "Sell me a pencil. I'll write imme-

Leonardo Sciascia: Sicilian Cliffhangers

By Herbert Mitgang
New York Times Service

R ACALMUTO, Sicily — Leonardo Scias-cia's farmhouse sits half-hidden on a hillside overlooking a landscape of vineyards and olive groves deep in south central Sicily, oear the town where he was born 65 years ago. But he does not have a telephone or keep a car, and his house has oo address. To visit the writer regarded by European critics as one of Italy's most distinguished novelists, it's almost necessary to make a wrong turn or two first. One such turnoff near Racalmuto led a recent visitor to a cul-de-sac named Via Pirandello, — a symbolic accident.

"At the moment I'm working oo a book about Pirandello," Sciascia said. "A dictionary that will include everything about him and his work — the names of his characters. his stories and dramas, biographical details and the personalities in his life. I've written one book about Pirandello and Sicily. I'm also thinking about my next article for L'Espresso. I write a monthly essay for the magazine on almost anything — literature, politics, history."

["Sicilian Uncles," a collection of four tales, three written in 1958 and the fourth in 1960, early in Sciascia's writing career, has just been published in the United States by Carcanet, translated by N. S. Thompson. The book deals with Mafiosi and heroes, and the interchangeability of justice and vengeance. They range from a tale of an American aunt who has been sending her relatives aid from the United States, but disrupts their lives when she arrives for a visit just before the 1948 election to the story of a young man who joins the Franco forces in Spain during the Spanish Civil War. [Writing in The New York Times Book Review, Sergio Perosa called the tales "highly readable and painfully witty." The stories "construe Sicily both as a particular reality and as a metaphor for the world."]

Sciascia reaches into the bookshelves in his living room — which hold editions of works by Shakespeare, Borges and Pirandello — and finds a copy of his latest novel, "La Strega e il Capitano" (The Sorceress and the Capitain). The 88-page book was published in Milan this spring; it might he a few years before it appears in English.

"After I collect my material, I write very quickly," Sciascia said. "When I begin a nov-el, I know everything about it —including the actual words and sentences. I ontline rather carefully. That means I make very few changes - pochissimo - when I get down to the actual writing. This novel was first serialized in a Milan newspaper, but I didn't like the way they did it. They broke it into sections just for the sake of suspense, like a cliffhanger. A book has to he read straight through." Readers who look forward to his books sometimes wonder if he writes too

slowly. "I type with only one finger of one hand, my right index finger. I keep one typewriter here in the country and another just like it at the apartment that my wife and I share in Palermo. I type about four pages a day. After every page, I take one cup of coffee. Three pages, three cups. Sometimes a fourth page is the one that I've written the

He has a ready response to the occasional criticism that some of his novels, at least in length, are more in the nature of novellas -that he does not go the long distance. "Well, there are thick writers and thin writers. Stendhal was the first thin writer. I share with the late Prince of Lampedusa, the Sicilian author of 'The Leopard,' a love for Stendhal, though his writing greatly differs from mine. You can categorize most novelists in one way or another. Stylistically, I think of novelists as barroque or not barroque. Faulkner was ba-roque. Hemingway, despite appearances, was also beroque. Lampedusa, part barroque, part not. Conrad, not baroque. Thorean, baroque.

ing whatever he could get his hands on that had been translated. He is not a university graduate and, when offered an honorary degree from the University of Palermo several years ago, he turned it down. For most of his working life, he served as a schoolteacher in Caltanissetta, not far from Racalimuto. He became a full-time writer only at age 48. Sciascia thinks very little of the popular American writers who have turned out com-mercial books about the Mafia. He did not finish "The Godfather" because he found it "tawdry." In several of his own novels and essays Mafiosi appear in an evil light. "The Mafia here is rooted in Sicilian ideology," he said. "Mafiosi have a sense of superiority. It's an attitude that contributes to their criminality. Lampedusa once wrote that the Sicilians regard themselves as the salt of the earth." Isn't he afraid that the Mafia will harm him because he has exposed them in his writings? The Maliosi aren't interested in literature, he said. "Normally, the Mafia confines itself only to a very well-defined danger." He smiled. "They're not worried about me, Who Whitman, beroque. Saroyan, beroque."

And himself? "Not beroque."

Sciescia said he educated himself hy read

Mrs. Wy. eth, who lives with her artist-hirhand in Chadds Ford, Pennsylva-nia, said the family uses the island during the summer months but said there should be enough space for the Wyeths and the caribon to soexist. "I don't believe there will be any conflict." she said. "If I did I wouldn't have allowed it."

The singer Jermaine Jackson, brother of Michael Jackson, said he helieves oeighbors' complaints about an 18-foot-high (5.5-meter), $250,000 fence he has built round pulled down. Jackson said some of his ocighbors had taimted his family with racial siurs even before the fence was built. The black wrought iroo fence is topped with a pair of iron gates trimmed with gold leaf. The initials of Jackson and his wite. are entwined in gold on the top of
